On a visit

The Strunjan salt pans are the northernmost and smallest among the Mediterranean salt pans still in operation, where Piran salt has been harvested by traditional method for over 700 years.

Stjuža is the only Slovene lagoon, a legacy of natural fish farming of times past. Today it is important for water birds, which come here looking for food, shelter or a nesting site.

The Cliff of Strunjan formed in the sea and remains united with it. It is made up of flysch rock mass, whose exposed, precipitous face is the tallest along the Adriatic.

With its lively flora and fauna, the mosaic of habitats in the park's waters display the height of the biotic diversity of the Slovene sea.

The favourable Mediterranean climate and flysch substratum created conditions which the local people put to good use, their traditional activities determining the characteristic appearance of the Strunjan Peninsula.
